“People comment on how I tend to store my paint brushes in my hair while I am working. I created Self Portrait as Geisha as an exploration of hair ornamentation. I collaged together handmade paper, crochet work, and lino-cut printmaking atop an oil color painting to create my “kanzashi”. The carnation symbolizes my Ohio heritage, the rose, my relationship with my husband, and the crochet work, traditional crafts handed down through my family. The “mochibana”-the white crochet work-is a traditional piece worn by geisha in the month of December, the month in which I was born. Geisha visit the theater and have their favorite kabuki actors sign the little tags called “maneki” that hang from the piece. In my version, I included self portraits of two artists I admire: Frida Kahlo and John Singer Sargent.”

The Columbus Bicentennial Commission Report described the popular view of our city as it approaches its third century as both a comfortable and a progressive place to live. Columbus, Ohio combines the best attributes of the perfect hometown with a vibrant, growing city. This fall's show is a prelude to the Bicentennial celebration.

Clockwise from top left: Whetstone Park of Roses, oil on canvas, 2009; From the Mezzanine, oil on canvas, 2005 (unfinished); Sunrise, Columbus, oil on canvas panel, 2009.
